Planting on a Schedule

Lorraine spends a lot of time over the winter planning out what we're going to grow each year. There is a tremendous amount of work involved in planning out a market garden --- we have to consider things like: what grows well in full sun versus shade, which plants require protection from the elements, time to maturity, companion planting, amount of watering required, what sells when, and so much more!

Consider tomatoes. We have seedlings growing in our small greenhouse (and we've transplanted some for sale at the Grand Opening this weekend). They are doing really well, but we will wait another week or so before planting them in the ground, because they require overnight temperatures consistently at or above 10°C. Any time after the May long weekend is a good bet, but remember last year lots of folks lost their tomato plants when we got a hard frost just after May 24th. So we don't just go by the date – we check the weather forecasts too!

If you want to get a head-start on the growing season, you can plant things like peas, spinach, kale and arugula in mid-April, because they are cold weather, hardy vegetables. And you can actually get a second planting in before the May long weekend!

If you are interested in learning more about planting schedules, why not pick up a copy of the Celestial Planting Calendar on sale now in the Farm Stand!

Don't miss us at the Wellington Farmers' Market starting this Saturday

We've got a New Look!

We've spruced up the Farm Stand. We hope you like the new colour scheme! We are open for business during the renos – just please watch the wet paint!
