Girls Getting Sh*t Done!

As a general rule, we try to stay neutral when it comes to talk of politics, but sometimes we just can't help ourselves! We were energized by recent events in the US, when a female Democratic Senator tried to read a letter from the wife of a famous civil rights activist, in opposition to a Republican nominee for a senior cabinet position. Seems some in the Senate took offense to what they viewed as an attack on a fellow Senator, and used a little-known Senate rule to silence her. In defense of the action, the Senate Majority Leader said he explained the situation to her and asked her to stop, but she didn't, so he had no choice but to silence her. When questioned by reporters about his action, he responded that he warned her, but "nevertheless, she persisted." That quote has become the rallying cry of women around the world who refuse to be ignored.

And that brings me to how this affects us at Thyme Again Gardens. As women farmers, and organic farmers at that, we have often felt ignored, or even worse, patronized. We bristle when people are surprised by what we have accomplished as if women aren't supposed to be able to accomplish these things (at least not without the help and guidance of men!!). So when asked how we've been able to do this or that, particularly in the face of adversity, our response will be "yes it was hard, but nevertheless, we persisted!"

And when someone expresses surprise at something we're doing, or congratulates us on accomplishing something they view as normally beyond the purview of women (but that we think is routine), we'll thank them for the compliment and add that it's really no big deal ... we're just
